Choose one apology made by a Canadian government (for example to Japanese Canadians, Chinese Canadians, residential school survivors or Africville). Is an apology enough? What else can be done?

A good answer mentions: A good answer names the apology and its date and explains the wrong done. It weighs what an apology does (admits the harm, tells the truth, honours survivors) against its limits. Other actions: compensation; giving back land or rebuilding (such as the Africville church replica); teaching the history in schools; memorials and days of remembrance; acting on recommendations such as the TRC's 94 Calls to Action.
