Part 3

The Responsibility to Protect asks when the world should act inside another country. Why is this hard to decide?

A good answer mentions: Sovereignty: states are meant to run their own affairs; protecting people from mass atrocities can clash with that; any action needs the UN Security Council, where a permanent member can use its veto; military force can cause harm and may be misused; peaceful means (diplomacy, aid, sanctions) come first; acting too late, as in Rwanda in 1994, can cost many lives.
